The meeting to-night was a big affair. No sents were provided and when the orations appeared they were cheered by a crawd of over 1600 per some. Some were hanging to the windows and doors of the Court-house. Others were perched in the trees, wille many listened from windows in business across the street. It was a great meeting, and was composed for the most part of inhoring men. Their appearance and working clothes made this evident. At first the audience was rather cold, but under the enthusiasm and logic of Mr. Sievenson, Mr. Alschuler, Mr. Todd and Mr. O'Donnell they crowded closer to the stand, and the cheers and applause became louder affil more prolonged. Another one like the Roosevelt Hospital ambulances is now being constructed for the New York Hospital, and one for the Presbyterian Hospital.

The vehicles for Roosevelt Hospital are unusually large, being I feet 6 inches in length on the inside, or 18 inches longer than the regulation vehicle.

The storage batteries which supply the current to operate the motors are carried in a box suspended from the body of the vehicle, and they do not have to be removed for recharging. When the ambulance reaches the stable after responding to a call a "charging plug" is pushed into action and the process of charging goes on For engergencies there is an extra set of batteries which can be placed in position in two minutes. The ambulance can run twenty-five miles on one charge.

The power is furnished with two two-horse-power motors, which are capable of developing six-horse-power if necessary. The motors, which are of a new type, are independently connected with the two rear wheel, so that if one should fail the other could do the work of both.
